EDUCATIONAL PATTERNS + SPATIAL RELATIONSHIPS

Educational facilities are becoming more specialized, emphasizing active learning, social engagement and mobility.

A focus on learning rather than teaching allows us to reevaluate classrooms and to consider informal spaces for learning.

It's essential to design for factors such as the availability of food, comfortable chairs, and furniture that supports a variety of learning activities and age ranges.

SOLUTIONS.

Government entities require office space allocation to be consistent. Developing a set of standards can optimize the functionality of these spaces with a cost-effective approach. These standards provide suitable office accommodations to each department and staff, providing flexibility and seamless adaptation to changes within various programs and staff.

Adopting universal office and workstation footprints by utilizing standardized components allow for multifaceted installations, transforming the furniture into a strategic asset.

Ideally, that first impression should be one that conveys caring, compassion and a commitment to patient well-being. It should portray a place where stress is relieved and families are accommodated.

Flexibility is key allowing your facility to keep up with rapid changes with needs and technologies. Immediate access to the right supplies and equipment is essential. Plans for efficiency in the distance staff travels and continuous line of sight throughout departments are important to the function of the space as well as its design.

Details like finishes, signage, and artwork are carefully selected and well-coordinated, all while focusing on maximizing the performance of your facility.

FLEXIBLE SPACES CREATE ENDLESS OPPORTUNITIES

Also known as architectural walls, demountable walls can offer simple solutions when it comes to maximizing floor space. There's no need for demolition or construction and can be installed in a matter of hours, minimizing downtime and disruption to employees.

Plus, demountable wall systems can be reconfigured quickly and easily. Since they are reusable, demountable walls can be repurposed or recycled, reducing landfill waste when the business needs change and evolve.

The tools used by employees to carry out their job requirements and their ability to work within a space that is ideal for them to do their job are worth the investments because ergonomics are proven to reduce costs, improve productivity, improve quality, improve employee engagement and create a better safety culture.

asset + inventory management

Furniture is a considerable investment for any organization and it's important that it is tracked. You can't manage what you can't measure. Establishing an inventory management system for furniture starts with an active database.

leasing + finance solutions

Leasing provides a cost-effective alternative to buying equipment outright. In fact, today it's possible for a small business to lease almost everything it needs, from computers to copiers to office furniture. Your line of business, financial situation, and equipment needs all play a role in deciding whether leasing is the right option for you.
